

AUT has a vision to contribute to our community, country and beyond through the discovery and application of knowledge for wellbeing and prosperity. Health Futures has been co-designed to help us do this and represents research funding to address key initiatives. One of these projects is about...

Re-envisaging Health Professional Education in Aotearoa New Zealand

The project aims to bring about radical change in the way health professionals are educated with the intention to address workforce issues and ensure greater access to healthcare services and improved outcomes. The initiative will involve a group of AUT researchers and educationalists working with government agencies, education providers, community and service users and health and disability service agencies.

Why us?

- The Faculty of Health and Environmental Sciences at AUT has a long history of providing health professional education, serving many areas of practice in the health and disability sector.
- It is a highly successful faculty, indicated by rankings including first in the country for health subjects.
- We are well positioned to appreciate issues in relation to how programmes of study are designed and delivered, and committed to constant evolution.
- The current requirements of Responsible Authorities present some complexities, and the Simpson report has highlighted an opportunity for cross-sector consultation and innovation.

Does this interest you? What next?

- We need research assistants (paid). Start January 2021
- Are you familiar with action research or evaluative methodology?
- Can you commit to up to two years part time?

Contact: Dr Denise Atkins

E: datkins@aut.ac.nz T: 021 456509